The picturesque garden style emerged in England in the 18th century, one of the growing currents of the larger Romantic movement. Garden designers like William Kent and Capability Brown emulated the allegorical landscape paintings of European artists, especially Claude Lorraine, Poussin and Salvator Rosa. The manicured hills, lakes and trees dotted with allegorical temples were sculpted into the land.

The history of the garden is linked to social and economic developments and that of transport and industry. There is a lot of information about Capability Brown, perhaps Britain's most famous garden architect, which was also very interesting. Whilst this is a history book, and could possibly be considered a textbook, it's a really good read.
