The Ways of Looking method adopted from Tate Liverpool and used in Tate Modern's Schools Programme provides a basis for creating interpretations of art works through four distinct frameworks: A Personal Response, Looking at the Subject, Looking at the Object and Looking at the Context.<sup>6</sup> Each framework sets out a series of questions that give depth and breadth to the act of looking. The plural structures of interpretation offered by the four frameworks create plural outcomes, manifest as ...

Art is not purely for looking at and admiring, a lot of it is functional too, especially when it comes to our homes. Everything from a delightfully patterned quilt on the bed, decorative tea towels or that cute pink heart covered teapot to the sleek computer case or angle-poised desk lamp can be considered a form of art. The Joy of Art

In European academic traditions, fine art is art developed primarily for aesthetics or beauty, distinguishing it from decorative art or applied art, which also has to serve some practical function, such as pottery or most metalwork. In the aesthetic theories developed in the Italian Renaissance, the highest art was that which allowed the full expression and display of the artist's imagination, unrestricted by any of the practical considerations involved in, say, making and decorating a teapot. I

These are attitudes that used to be commonplace, suggests Hodgkinson, before the Brave New World of industrial capitalism swept us all into its smothering embrace. In the Brave Old World that preceded it, we valued 'husbandry', or 'the fine art of looking after yourself' as the book's subtitle puts it.
