Dedicated to the glory of literature, reading and writing are joined and transformed in exquisite continuity.

Written in 1938, Chateau D'Argol was Julien Gracq's literary debut and was heralded by Andre Breton as the first truly Surrealist novel. From Gracq's point of view, however, it was a departure from a movement he had never really joined in the first place. Although he maintained his admiration for Breton and the Surrealist project, in Chateau D'Argol he cut away from that style with an idiosyncratic blend of linear storytelling and poetic excursions. The
