The Politics of Love – Max Harris and Philip McKibbin. Posted on May 20, 2015 by mxharris. Around the world, progressive-minded people are struggling to articulate an end-goal for politics. The Right, in most places, remains committed to the tight logic of neoliberalism (and its ideals of private property, liberty, and efficiency).

A politics of love should work to disrupt, rather than ingrain, neoliberal individualism, and should subsequently seek to place value on the immediate and distal other. Love as a force which moves out and away from the self, demands that we feel a sense of concern and moral obligation for all living things and the environments which sustain them.

Politics of Love \ The University of Edinburgh

We wanted to think through what love means, how love might bring about stronger societies, how it fits with anger and conflict, how it relates to various forms of oppression, and how we might realise the Politics of Love through activism, campaigning, and other kinds of political activity. The aim was to give love, and the Politics of Love, a stronger intellectual foundation in the hope that this will enhance the work of those individuals and groups seeking to realise love in their communities.

The politics of love. Politics that affirms democracy as the way we care for our fellow citizens in the thousand ways that they cannot possibly or practically take care of themselves alone. A political movement that is grounded in the spiritual and moral value of compassion, especially for the most vulnerable members of our society.

This selfless love for others, especially those we don't know in different parts of the world, forms the essential foundation for a new world polity. Replacing the old, limited forms of ethnic, political, and patriotic identification with a sense of the unity of the global family of humankind, it asks every person to relate to their human cousins with love, caring, and compassion.

In "A Politics of Love," Marianne Williamson asks us to consider the possibility that a collective shift in consciousness can affect grass roots change. Our government is controlled by special interests who seek profit for the elite at the expense of the people. Whether they destroy humanity in the process seems not to be a consideration.

Julie Kohler of the Democracy Alliance recently made a series of standard arguments against what she calls "love politics." Kohler argued that focusing on the tone of our politics leaves us papering over the real injustices that have taken place in our history and are still taking place today. This can be true.
